Man, dog alerted family to flames threatening house near Garnett July 25

GARNETT - For two weeks, Randi Salazar wondered about the mysterious “guardian angel” who pointed on her family’s door at 4 a.m. July 23, making them all flames crept just outside the bedroom window. The family escaped and called firefighters, who extinguished the blaze with only minor damage to the trailer house, and Ouellette told him about the fire.

Saturday morning, July 25, and spent 15 minutes, determined to wake the people inside. Soon, he heard a dog bark. Not long after that, a man opened the door and Ouellette told him about the fire.

Ouellette didn’t offer his name, and left as soon as he was sure the family was aware of the situation. He is a supervisor, and other employees were waiting for him to open the shop.

At that time, Garnett City Manager Joyce Martin said Monday, representatives from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment first took samples from the lake Monday, Aug. 18, after city employees noticed what appeared to be blue-green algae Friday, Aug. 15. The algae is located in two areas, one in a cove near the water treatment plant in the northeast corner of the lake, and one in a cove near play-ground equipment in the northwest corner. The city closed the lake Aug. 17 and it has remained closed since then. The algae cannot be removed, it likely will dissipate over time. Martin said the concentration of the algae in Crystal Lake is not high, and she is hopeful the situation will be resolved soon.

Barricades have been erected around the lake to keep people away from the water, although other facilities like picnic tables and playground equipment still can be enjoyed. Martin said people appear to have knocked down barricades at times, which is ille-gal, anyone caught violating city ordinances will be issued a citation.

Donald the Whiner strikes again—and...and again

Donald Trump is supposed to be, as he's let on to his new business partner, the most fabulous wheeler in all of American politics.

By Trump’s own account, he’s the deadbeat, unenterprising, gawky, underachieving, bad-news-from-another-state businessman that we should all get behind and never let go. It’s his second act, you see, and he wants to do this so badly, he says, that anyone who works with him, anyone who’s involved in any way, shape, or form with any kind of endeavor related to politics, can expect to have their lives ruined, their careers derailed, their reputations shredded. It’s more than just politics, you see, it’s personal, it’s about getting even, it’s about making people who were involved in negative ways to him feel the pain they’ve given him.

This is a stark choice, and there are clear political ramifications. Depending on how these decisions are made on who gets into the polls, and who doesn’t, it could mean the difference between a Trump victory and a Trump defeat. To make that decision, the contractors will be hired by Oct. 1, and by Jan. 1 will have some idea of where the candidates stand. The contractors are tasked with vetting those ideas, which will make for an interesting election.

What kind of look will ‘fresh eyes’ give?

The Legislature is within weeks of approving $10 million (USD) for a consultant that would be hired by Sept. 1 to figure out more efficient ways to do business and potentially cut state appropriations for K-12 education and business offices, payroll clerks or purchasing agents. That’s probably the quickest, simplest solution to a problem that has been growing for some time.

Another key is that the contractor will be hired by Oct. 1, and by Jan. 1 will have some idea of where the candidates stand. Tyson recaps state legislative session

By CARYN TYSON

Independence Day: The principal public decision of the 4th fund the Supreme Court creating the Legislature. The Special and most hotly debated is whether the Supreme Court has the constitutional power to control the size of the General Assembly. The Supreme Court has issued some restraints on the powers of the General Assembly, which the Legislature has sought to enforce. The Legislature has passed a number of bills to limit the powers of the General Assembly, but the Supreme Court has struck down these bills as unconstitutional.

Waste: Spending: The Legislature has continued to spend cautiously. There are some areas where the Legislature has been more aggressive in cutting spending, such as education and health care. Overall, the Legislature has been able to balance the budget and reduce spending, but there is still room for improvement. The Legislature has also been able to pass some important bills, such as the bill to increase the minimum wage and the bill to improve education funding.

Welfare: The Legislature has continued to make changes to the welfare system. The Legislature has increased funding for welfare programs, but there is still concern about the adequacy of these programs. The Legislature has also passed a number of bills to prevent fraud and abuse in the welfare system.

Education: The Legislature has continued to support education. The Legislature has increased funding for education, but there is still concern about the adequacy of this funding. The Legislature has also passed a number of bills to improve education, such as the bill to increase the teacher pay and the bill to improve curriculum.

Health Care: The Legislature has continued to make changes to the health care system. The Legislature has passed a number of bills to improve access to health care, such as the bill to increase the number of doctors and the bill to increase the number of hospitals.

Austin Hills Hired as New Athletic Trainer at Baker

BALSWIN CITY – Baker University director of athletics Theresa Yetmar and head athletic trainer Lynn Bott are pleased to announce the hire of athletic trainer Austin Hills to the Baker University Sports Medicine staff.

Austin is the son of Jim and Barbara Hills and a graduate of the late Lois Hills of Westphalia. Hills received his bachelor’s degree in athletic training from Washburn University in 2015.

“Hills received his bachelor’s degree in athletic training from Washburn University in 2015 and played football for the Ichabods as a punter. He then earned his masters degree in sports management from the University of Kansas in 2017. “We are excited to have Austin Hills as our new athletic trainer,” said Yetmar. “Hills has worked with us on and off the field for years, both in offensive and defensive positions, and also the training staff. In 2015, he was the secondary athletic training contact for tennis and basketball, soccer, softball and tennis. He was also named Warhawks Athletic Training Student of the Year in 2015. While at KU, he was the primary athletic training staff contact for the football and spirit squad and assisted with football. In 2016, Hills also assisted the athletic training staff of the Tennessee Titans at the teams NFL training camp.

“It is important for us to maintain our high standards of care for our student athletes, so we are pleased to hire someone of Austin’s caliber to join our sports medicine staff,” said Yetmar. “Austin’s varied experiences with multiple sports will fit in with our team approach. Austin has been well regarded every place he has worked in athletic training, and will bring professionalism, energy, and knowledge to the position.”

How to Sell Stuff

1. The right words are key in any selling situation. The same way a word can build a bridge, a word can build a blockade. Words are our most important tool in any presentation, whether in a formal boardroom setting or simply a one-on-one customer meeting. The right words are key in building credibility and success and value to a customer or prospect. Memorize a few words and phrases to show the picture, you're sunk if you can't get off the hook.

2. Use your client’s name as you converse. It builds familiarity and trust. When you're introduced, concentrate on it and commit it to memory, as well as other names in the conversation. Don't let it slip away.

3. Avoid “Well, you know...” It is a blockade word. “We’re a little more expensive than our competitor...” It takes the place of “but,” which negates anything illustrative. “Should we go ahead and schedule your new solar for delivery...” Prompts that lead a customer to visualize a benefit. “Just imagine what you can do with the money you’ll save with a car that gets 30 mpg instead of 15!” Prompts that lead a customer to create his own concept of value. The right words are key in building credibility and success and value to a customer. “Should we go ahead and schedule your new solar for delivery...”

4. Use your words to convey value, confidence and benefit to the customer, and you’ll find it helps you sell stuff!

2. Use your client’s name as you converse. It builds familiarity and trust. When you're introduced, concentrate on it and commit it to memory, as well as other names in the conversation. Don’t let it slip away.

3. Avoid “Well, you know...” It is a blockade word. “We’re a little more expensive than our competitor...” It takes the place of “but,” which negates anything illustrative. “Should we go ahead and schedule your new solar for delivery...” Prompts that lead a customer to visualize a benefit. “Just imagine what you can do with the money you’ll save with a car that gets 30 mpg instead of 15!” Prompts that lead a customer to create his own concept of value. The right words are key in building credibility and success and value to a customer. “Should we go ahead and schedule your new solar for delivery...”

4. Use your words to convey value, confidence and benefit to the customer, and you’ll find it helps you sell stuff!

5. When you're introduced, concentrate on your name as you converse. It builds familiarity and trust. When you're introduced, concentrate on it and commit it to memory, as well as other names in the conversation. Don’t let it slip away.

6. The Jerry and Karen Showalter family donated their scarecrow at the “Kids Gone Wild” booth at the 2015 Outdoor Summit to be held at the Harris Park at Christmas time.

7. The train can be displayed in Harris Park at Christmas time.

Walt and I just got home from the 2015 KATP and two weeks later I ran on the road again. Only this time I didn’t travel near as far and was only gone for two days.

On the weekend of July 18-19, I drove to Topeka when I took part in the Annual Summer Shoot held in the Kansas History Museum from 9 a.m.-5 p.m. each day.

What did Summer Shoot entail? This was the year we were involved in the processing of the remaining artifacts found at the 2015 KATP. This was accomplished by sorting of previously water-screened and heavy floatation fraction samples, artifact cleaning (scraps, stone tools, bones, shells and other debitage) cataloging and limited Floatation sample processing. On Saturday afternoon at 3 p.m. we all attended a one hour electrolysis demonstration. It was really interesting.

Perhaps I should explain Archaeology Floatation. Archaeological Floatation involves using water to process soil or feature fill to recover tiny artifacts. Dried soil is placed on a screen, and water is gently bubbled up through the soil, seeds, charcoal and other light material (called the light fraction) float off and tiny pieces of stone called microdebitage or micro-debitage, bone fragments and other relatively heavy materials (called the heavy fraction) are left behind.

Water screening is another process used to find small artifacts hidden in cloths of dirt. Water is sprayed on to dissolve heavily hard packed soil which often conceals small ceramic shreds, buttons, bones and other small items.

Twenty-one of us worked on Saturday and Sinister on Sunday donating 250 plus work hours and completed the entire 2015 KATP backlog of 92 trays of artifacts.

For me it was another really great experience in the field of archaeology.
